Having bought the Associated Press franchise, formerly owned by the Sedalia Dispatch, it is the intention of Mr. J West Goodwin to begin at once the publication of a morning newspaper. He was willing to take the chances. He was also asked how he could furnish this meat at one cent per pound less than the cattle called for in the contract were expected to net. His answer was that he was furnishing a number of hotels and boarding houses in Sedaiia with loin and choice cuts, and that he made his profit on them, while by disposing of the shoulders and hindquarters to the prison, he was enabled to kill more cattle and keep his business going, and that unless he had disposed of this meat to the prison he would have been compelled to give up his other contracts. Mr. Downing asked witness this question : "Did you ever give the warden or anybody else connected with the penitentiary any compensation for receiving this meat from you?" "I have never given Willis or his son or brother, or any of his family, or any one connected with the penitentiary, or any state official, so much as one cigar" This was followed by the query, "Did you give them anything prior to the last two years?" ever had occasion to ventilate. Also residing at Sheldon at this time was Miss Emma Wells, an accomplished and beautiful young lady, probably nineteen years of age, the daughter of a prominent carpenter of the village, whose mother died several years ago. Miss Wells had suitors by the score, but she was still heart free when she made the acquaintance of Crews, who had deported himself in an ad-

This project he soon carried into "Sedalia is to have a new passenger depot. This effect, taking up his abode at the Springs about the first of June.

The change of location did not prove either agreeable or profitable to Mr. Wells and after a residence of a few days at El Dorado he informed his daughter that he

REMOVING TO NORTH MISSOURI.

To this Miss Emma offered serious objections, and suggested that it would be much better for them to go back to Sheldon. The idea was repulsive to Mr. Wells, and he declined to entertain it. The daughter was equally as obstinate about going to North Missouri, which caused her father to ask for her reasons. Thus interrogated, the denouement came, and the eves of Mr. Wells were opened to the true state of affairs.

MAKE GOOD HIS PROMISE to the injured girl. Accordingly, during the latter part of June, Mr. Wells and his daughter packed up their household goods and proceeded to Sheldon, where they at once commenced housekeeping, never even intimating to any one the true reason for Hardly had the household effects been righted when Crews, who was still residing in Sheldon, paid a visit to Miss Emma, evidently not being aware that she had confessed her guilt to her parent or that she was in an interesting condition Their ed. The young lady lost no time, but proceeded to business at once, and besought her seducer to make good his promise and save her, as far as possible, from disgrace.

While she was thus imploring him, Mr. mings of all kinds. Wells appeared upon the scene, and in language that could not be mistaken, told Crews that he must marry his daughter or

This proved satisfactory to all concerned, and the next day Crews left for Johnson county, where he remained a few days with friends and then returned to Sheldon. Instead of fulfilling his promise, though, he purposely avoided both Mr. Crews and his daughter, until the former, now thoroughly determined, visited Crews at his place of business and insisted on knowing when the ceremony was to be performed.

The 3d day of July was the time set, and on the morning of that date Mr. Wells, his daughter and Crews left for Nevada, and before sunset the seducer and his victim were united in marriage. They returned to Sheldon on the night train, and a few days thereafter Mr. and Mrs. Crews commenced housekeeping

Of course the marriage created considerable surprise, but it was nothing to what followed some three months later, or about the first of October, when a child was prematurely born and lived but a few hours.
